Dear Recruiter / HR Department,

Thank you for taking an interest in my website, portfolio, and skills.

I am ambitious, a fast learner and contagiously enthusiastic about life and would love to develop my coding skills working for a good cause. I am an experienced account manager with demonstrable sales and customer service experience looking for my next challenge in the tech world. Having completed a Boot Camp in front-end development I have realised my new passion, coding. I am confident that my future career will be as a web developer or software developer as I am disciplined and achieve what I put my mind to. This will set me in good standing with a new employer as I will put my absolute all into learning the code as well as adopting company standards and practices.

I bring with me the ability to communicate with both internal and external customers. My 5-year experience working as an account manager / digital marketer for a digital web agency means I know how to manage client expectations against business objectives.

I have built several applications in my own time to further develop and practice my coding skills including my own website built using REACT: rob-saunders.com and a free online tool that I conceptualised and designed from the ground up - completely custom-coded. I did this to practice and further develop my JavaScript knowledge: <https://www.countmykeywords.co.uk>. I did all of this on top of a full-time job which is a testament to my dedication and discipline.

While I may be at the beginning of my development career, if you hire me, you will get an enthusiastic hard worker who will put everything into learning and becoming a valuable asset to the team - all whilst wearing a big smile!

Please contact me if you need any further information and I look forward to hearing from you.

Your sincerely,

Rob Saunders
